

Chinese Medicine Degree Programs

Find Chinese medicine degree programs in the United States and Canada. Chinese medicine degree programs are becoming more and more popular.

Students interested in enrolling in one of several Chinese medicine degree programs will find that a great number of alternative and Oriental medicine schools offer these programs, and certificate courses. For example, students participating in Bachelor of Applied Science Chinese medicine degree programs will gain a wealth of knowledge and skills in complementary medical systems (Chinese medicine and Western medicine) entailing coursework and practical training in acupuncture, herbal medicine, massage therapy (Tuina – Chinese medical massage), and nutrition. In addition to clinical subjects, students participating in Chinese medicine degree programs will acquire in-depth knowledge about anatomy, physiology, pharmacology, pathology and traditional Chinese medicine (TCM) theories and history. Students may also engage in a masters of science in Oriental medicine course. This Chinese medicine degree program provides students with a four-year curriculum that trains future practitioners in classical Chinese medicine; preparing candidates to become licensed in the art of acupuncture and Oriental medicine. In many cases, most states require national certification from the National Certification Commission for Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine (NCCAOM) prior to attaining licensure. Furthermore, if you're like most ambitious students, you can opt to enroll in a dual Chinese medicine degree program where you can attain both your degree in classical Chinese medicine and in naturopathy. These Chinese medicine degree training programs do require a fair amount of time and dedication; often lasting about 6 years in duration. In addition, like many conventional degrees, earning your Chinese medicine degree at one of several healing arts schools often means that you must have had attained prior formal education and training from one of several traditional colleges and/or universities. If you (or someone you know) are interested in finding Chinese medicine degree programs, let education within fast-growing industries like massage therapy, cosmetology, acupuncture, oriental medicine, Reiki, and others get you started!
