If you have a difficult of finding the way out from the problem of finding a corner to sleep in a very small rooms, you are not alone! As there are also millions of people who have same problem who are living in cramped quarters, whether they are college students, have too many roommates, or living in a very tiny room space. Apart from saving room space, there are also another benefit of using futon, which is its flexibility of use. You can use futon in the guest room where also have limited space and have a wonderfully decorated room making the most out of your limited space. You can purchase a Futon in a number of different patterns and styles, that will enable you to make the Futon suitable for any guest room's décor as well as your house style. Now I can say that these people must looking for a kind of futon bed to solve their problem and it is a really wise choice. Futon is a kind of mattress which is original is from Japan. Even though it is now very popular among western countries, but the style of mattress itself as well as the usage are still remain the same as what they are used in Japan, which mattress rests upon a Tatami mat and isn't set upon a bed frame, as is the norm in the west. The Futon mattress also is folded and stored away during the day in Japan. In fact, Japanese futon are made fro natural cotton so it is not harmful to our environment. The normal way to clean this kind of futon is very easy by only put it against the strong sunlight and hit it by using hard bamboo stick to get rid of dusty stuff and mold. This is actually a very healthy practice as science is just now releasing facts regarding how many germs and bacteria thrive on mattresses and pillows. However, there is a slight different in terms of its design as the most of futon used in western countries is normally set upon a bed frame and the futon is used as both a bed and a couch. So this is why futon is very popular among people who have limited space of their room as it can be used in both ways. In western countries, as mentioned above that the futon is generally be remain in the bed frame, so it is uncommon to have it clean or take out from its frame then put it against the sunlight daily (which almost impossible) However, one thing is similar, and that is that most Western Futon mattresses are eco-friendly as well and are made with foam style batting. Though thicker than their Japanese counterparts, they are often springless mattresses. The most benefit of using futon is as the futon is a springless bed but if you want a with-spring one, are is also s spring-filled mattress available for you buy additional one.
