

The 1887 Invention of Contact Lens

Contact lenses have been around since the 1887 invention of contact lens. The 1887 invention of contact lens was considered quite amazing at the time. Adolf E. Fick, Eugene Kalt and August Muller are the men given credit for the 1887 invention of contact lens. They did not work together on the 1887 invention of the contact lens. The 1887 invention of contact lens did occur the same year with all three men given the credit. When thinking about the 1887 invention of contact lens it is important to remember that others also developed some form of the contact lens in later years. It was because of the 1887 invention of contact lens that other people were able to improve on the first designs. The 1887 invention of contact lens by Fick, Kalt, and Muller hinged on the use of glass scleral shells. Fick called the 1887 invention of contact lens contact spectacles. The 1887 invention of contact lens by Muller was named Corneal Lens. Kalt used his 1887 invention of contact lens to treat keratokonus by using a glass shell that had the approximate radius of a normal cornea. The 1887 invention of contact lens allowed other developments in the early 1900's. Because of the 1887 invention of contact lens, optical companies were able to advance the use of scleral contact lenses. After the 1887 invention of contact lens many improvements were made in contact lenses. Those first trying to wear the 1887 invention of contact lens were mostly uncomfortable. The 1887 invention of contact lens meant that people trying to wear them had really big pieces of glass in their eyes. The 1887 invention of contact lens brought about some big changes in the possibilities of new ways to improve vision. Because of the 1887 invention of contact lens, people today who need visual help to see are able to try many different types of contact lenses.

About the Author

Neat set of optical illusions. 3 more pics after the jump. Yellow area reads as optical while the colored area reads as illusion. Amazing.

Source: <http://www.productsherbal.com>