

Are we really a nation of dog lovers?&nbsp;&nbsp;

I am not talking about your average pooch, I am talking about the most obedient, loyal, loving, and trusting animal I know, the racing greyhound. This breed of dog is the most discarded of all breeds of dog, especially before, during and after their racing days. Being an owner for many years and then a trainer of racing greyhounds I have seen both worlds and have now decided, to give up and just try and look after my 14 greyhounds that are now pets. They are wonderful creatures and all greyhounds deserve better. I am out of work at the moment but I will do everything I can do to give these animals a home. The reason I gave up was because I could not sit around and watch what I call sheer cruelty. I have seen an awful lot of perfectly healthy animals put to sleep basically due to injuries, too old for racing or just not fast enough and have outlived their sell by date. The owners and trainers of this small minority are gutless and only one thing rules them, money. These are truly wonderful creatures and a loving home is all they need, sadly thousands of these animals never get that far. It saddens me. Everything in greyhound racing is quite often hidden from the general public and a small minority of owners and trainers use them only for one thing, gambling. Only when these animals have given their best, they are put to sleep, and then the younger greyhounds take their place only to endure the same fate, as the previous greyhounds before them. For this reason I have written a book on the subject and this will be out mid- August. You can pre order this e-book at.
