

Anger Management Classes

In a society that has become increasingly vile anger management facilitators have aligned themselves with law enforcement, the judicial system and the community in an effort to prevent violence and aggression. The growth of the anger management field is no accident. Anger Management popularity is fueled by a great need. Anger Management is more than a lucrative niche, it is a community service. Anger Management facilitators are on the front line of the war on violent crime. Law enforcement takes on the role of suppression and the judicial system focuses on consequences but anger management is designed to prevent violent crimes such as assault, terrorist threats, property damage and even murder. Anger Management Classes have been found to improve communication in marriages. Many families seek out anger management in an effort to prevent divorce, domestic violence and child abuse. When divorce is inevitable many couples participate in anger management classes in an effort to mediate child custody issues. Leaders in the field include Anderson and Anderson, a global trainer of anger management facilitators and the only anger management trainer approved by the Los Angeles County Superior Court, Century Anger Management a anger management trainer out of Orange County focuses on self referred clients and clients ordered from their human resources department. Anger Management has even invaded the blogosphere. A popular blog entitled Angry in L.A found at http://www.angryinla.com describes life through the eyes of an Los Angeles based anger management teacher. Lastly Daybreak Counseling Service is one of the only anger management education centers who offers classes to adolescents as well as adults. Anger Management Classes are a cost effective avenue in dealing with anger and stress when compared to traditional therapy. Classes are taught in a psycho-educational model and capitalize on the power of the group when teaching resistant clients. One on one executive coaching is also provided by many facilitators.
