

Curtis loves to dance

Justina Curtis didn't plan on coming back to the Valley after graduating from Marshall University with her degree in physical therapy assisting, but the Waynesboro-area native knew it was in the cards when a position opened up at Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center in Fishersville.

"It was really just a stroke of luck," said the 2005 graduate. "Within three weeks of graduating, I had a job.

Just last week, Curtis and her colleagues at WWRC partnered up with Stewart Middle School for a Disability Sensitivity Day program designed to educate eighth-graders on the physical and hidden disabilities people around them could be living with.

"It was awesome," Curtis said. "I wasn't expecting it to be such a hit, but seeing their faces, it's such a reward."

In addition to working at WWRC, Curtis also dances with Ballet Extension in Bridgewater.

The 22-year-old has been dancing for 17 years and has been on two national tours.

From www.newsleader.com:

The other day we were having a discussion regarding the evolution of how our culture defines physical beauty. She showed me some art that seemed.

North American ideals of physical beauty or bodily perfection During our civilized debate, one subject that came that has appealed to me to talk about. Even though most of us recognize the fallacy of placing too great a value on appearance, our desire for physical beauty is so ingrained in us that we cannot.

This book celebrates an unassuming bit of physics that also turns out to be an inspiring.

A community about physical beauty. Tag and discover new products. Share your images and discuss your questions with physical.

These testers present similar resumes yet are very different in physical appearance. They are on the lookout for the beauty.

A successful fashion model discusses the pitfalls of building a life on physical appearance rather.

Those who oppose the trend must make a positive case that physical beauty actually undermines the art of opera. It seems to me very unlikely.
